DARK: A CAMPFIRE COMPANION

56 original eerie poems and scary stories by James Brakken, author of The Treasure of Namakagon & Tor Loken and the Death of Chief Namakagon This poem is based on a true event. It was written to help readers pronounce "Namakagon." (Gramma-noggin rhymes with Namakagon and may be the only thing that does.)

Gramma's Noggin

Gramma bumped her noggin
Up on the Namekagon
While floatin' down the river in a boat.
She noticed not the tree
The beaver cut, you see
It rang her bell with quite an awful note.

A thousand trees or more,
She passed along the shore.
Who knew this one would bean her on the head?
Just before it fell,
A beaver gnawed it well.
An evil twist of fate it must be said.

Or was it Grampa's little shove
That brought the tree from up above?
No one will know what caused the final curtain.
'Cept Grampa and the beaver
And the judge. He's a believer
Less in fate and more in facts he finds quite certain.

Yes, Gramma bumped her noggin
On the River Namekagon.
Now Grampa's in the jailhouse feelin' sad.
The judge went with the facts
When the sheriff found Grampa's ax.
As for the beaver, he had nothing more to add.

That beaver's out there yet.
Chewing briskly, you can bet.
Soon a falling tree will splash again.
So, when on the Namekagon,
Be sure to guard your noggin
And think of dear old Grampa in the pen.
